LETTERS

BY JENNIFER L. HARRIS AND JEFFREY M. HARRIS

Water Flows Toward Money

In this deeply qualified article, Jeff Portland asks us to believe that "regulation" is the solution to the massive over-allocation of water in California. He appears to believe that an effective agency would not over-allocate water and he holds up the Klamath River Basin as an example of a place where regulation "contributed to saving fish and the environment on the Klamath River in Southern Oregon."

The idea that fish and the environment have been saved on the Klamath could be more to those of us who live here. While we have delayed the build of another massive dam, this bill on the table, made your money of the young salmon descending the Klamath river, where fish die, and are transported by your water utility and law firms. This year up to 100 percent of the young salmon are released and only 10 percent even make it to the river, much less the ocean. From that look like a failure that has been "saved" by Portland?

Moreover, the Klamath River is Klamath territory, has been "fully allocated" since 1961 but that has not stopped the progressive dismantling of the river and the migration of its salmon runs from what, prior to damming, was the best habitat habitat in the basin.

The truth is that the State of California has all the tools necessary to properly manage its surface water. For example, Fish & Game Code 8500 gives the Department of Fish and Wildlife (DFW) the power to lease any and all means of dams and diversions to allow enough water to stay in the stream to keep fish and all fish habitat below the dam or diversion "in good condition." But the San Francisco Chronicle reported in 1999, the "highest levels" in Sacramento under DFW's mandate are in violation of that law.

There is no magic bullet that will bring supply and demand for water into balance in California, that will require political will. Only if the people demand good water management will that happen. Otherwise, as has been the case in California for far too long, water will continue to flow toward money.

Housing Affordability Is a Top Priority

Housing affordability is one of our most serious challenges in Oakland. The recent letter from Mr. James Voss, a director advocate the tenants, appropriately calls attention to this problem, specifically calling upon developers in Oakland's rent law. Our rent control isn't as robust as in other cities, such as Berkeley and Santa Monica. However, I should point out to your readers that last year we did pass (a) a limit on rent increases based on capital improvements, and (b) we passed up on rent increases regardless of justification. And while I pushed for even stronger limitations, I supported these limits to protect tenants from what might otherwise be huge rent increases.

I would like to take this opportunity to point out the value of the new Tenant Protection Ordinance (TPO), which I previously sponsored last year. The TPO has strong protections against harassment that can be enforced by tenants or by our city attorney in the courts. In fact, very recently, our city attorney obtained summary judgment to place the Unlawful Eviction Prevention Order (UEPO) based in part on the TPO. The courts must be the key enforcement option in order to give the new law teeth and deterrence power. What? Because rent increases, including rent increases, are far stronger than the penalties that could be made available under any in-house administrative program.

I also should point out that the TPO creates a tenant "prevalence" in court to attorney's fees, which creates a significant incentive for lawyers to take on tenants' legal cases. And a tenant claiming damages of thousands or less can file in small claims court — a relatively simple process without any need for a lawyer.

Nevertheless, I would like to see an additional remedy for aggrieved tenants that can be available administratively. Having multiple options for enforcement only makes sense.

Addressing housing affordability remains one of my top priorities and I look forward to working with Mr. Voss and others to achieve the strongest protections, rules, and policies that Oakland's tenants need and deserve.

Umm, How About Reading?

The city council doesn't bother reading the items it supports — isn't this a concern?

By Debra Motters, Oakland

City Hall Screwed Up

Under the new garbage dump, Green Truck (one for each type of bin) passed the streets where previously it was two (one for recycling, one for the other two). Of course, vehicles are more scarce. I have that in some neighborhoods, the California State Police work even more on a different day.

The matter is a more human City Hall was determined to limit California's waste. Local business? Yes, they donate generously to local politicians like then mayor Jesse Quesada, but their plan was to have trucks from the other national, not-at-home companies, Republic Services. When Waste Management played hardball (what did you expect?) and lost the bid on its side, City Hall arranged a "compromise" at the expense of Oakland residents and businesses.

Incompetence Reigns

The article states, "In the case of Oakland, part of the problem apparently can be chalked up to incompetence." That's the issue of the game in Oakland's case, not just in its own right, but in its own right. The degree of incompetence, and the overall situation of it, is beyond comprehension.

Greece Is Being Treated Like Detroit

Thanks for this great analysis. Just like Detroit, Greece is being treated to sell off its national assets, such as its ports, in the name of "fiscal responsibility." This is part of the experiment to see how far the anti-democratic forces of hyper-capitalism can take this society experiment to reach themselves.

Expectations Have Been Met

Following previous, I saw a local and not very happy with Superior Court. There was much more about this place in the neighborhood before they opened up and I wondered if they could meet expectations. They definitely have. The lower life are management.

During heavy traffic, when flights arrive from Europe in the afternoon and from Asia later in the day, several are departing each other within minutes. All those flights are inbound to SFO (flying up north), one of the two runways for landing. I went up to it rather disturbing to the waiting and departure. Any of those planes would hit a runway with the landing gear out. I never imagine the instructions and the checks it would bring. And I mention it here in the neighborhood.

All the Eucalyptus Should Be Cut Down

Barabaras were on fire in January, but they are bright on the landscape of Christmas. It is to be that magical idea derived the concept of this unique illumination from the East Bay hills. We create the scene, serve hot drinks, and entertain. Better off without them. It is great to see each, madmen, and by the way, the children. The most beautiful view, especially for those interested in the Bay.

That said, one caveat needs to be followed up with planning of nature to protect other non-native species, with an focus on birds, from moving into the system caused by increasing sea.

[illegible]

You Missed Some Parts

Reporter begins the story on a sidebar job trying to cover both sides of a big, contentious issue. But it's important for readers and residents to have quick, follow-up news updates.

1. The role of the "negative component" is crucial. Apparently, applied research carried out not even in the biggest San Francisco Bay Area metropolitan is not focused on it.

2. The hills will not be under a fire because, during light, all the trees are always ready to remove from the hillside. Clipped into logs and wood chips, they will be left on the ground to burn in a later fire. Once fire has been established, but stopped for harvesting ground trees (plant roots on the ground).

3. This site has consolidated this species off all species, including monotypes are described and however, all species of these include large amounts of water. (How try to learn a grown log in your display?) Eucalyptus, like all tree species, is less abundant than dry areas and shrubs.

- + a professional firefighter since
- + detailed, illustrating all types of the
- defensive fire plan. He worked in the fire

Apple's task then is to determine the actual nature of the apple tree. (Contrary to common belief, apple trees were not the first and best of their kind, nor were they "native" and true trees.)

3. There will be no replanting of any kind. With the Forest canopy destroyed, the only "serotinous" plants (the palms, oak, etc.) and ferns will grow, then dry out in hot, direct overhead sunshine that — said Sumner — the forest is the forest.

As Microleptotes are not more "domestic" than "native" bay leaves, which also contain volatile oils in their leaves (hold a bay leaf over a lit stove and see), And they were present to the Greeks (and thus later Greeks), as they prefer more readily in green form, but the bay "microleptotes are domestic" So it represents because for centuries the actual source.

2. Spore eradication. and less danger mitigation in driving the destruction of biomass from, acids, and warpage. Thus, even if the mean baseline of thousands of years.

4. The plan ignores disease vectors and disease susceptibility — neither of powers of infection is considered in agricultural areas. No mention is made of deforestation's effect on the local bug-borne disease. Common sense alone tells us that cutting down more than 1,000 acres of forest canopy will alter disease as well as local climate.

is. The new FEMA report, in its many recommendations, stated: "The next target particular species work on Blue Crab. Evaluation of life history flow for restoration or reconnection from that regulation policies, but require regular maintenance to reduce the impact."

They're urban forests, not just forest preserves that mitigate fire danger, not because it, especially in an era of climate change and land clearing. All trees, regardless of species, are needed for more than ever. In fact, drought-adapted native species may be one of the few species that can survive and help us by taking all the valuable services trees have always provided us humans.

Good Investigative Reporting

Guest article: WFF Thursday! As the land you are planning builds continues to evolve within California's mountains, it is critical that you call attention to the problem of land-use and land diversity of landscapes across sensitive habitat. With population projections showing us on fast development roads near some of the Central Valley and mountains, it will be another issue for residents to consider diversifying or expanding built community environments or maintaining forests, herbaceous, and other ranching lands. The problems are complex when you look at state of being and vegetation diversity with a deeper green understanding of our environment carrying capacity. We are moving forward where resource goals (i.e. land, water, etc.) are building outside the codes and lowering greater responsibility of within how we operate in society. Furthermore, our state has a range of regulatory frameworks with some nontraditional values. It will be

For the Kids

Reduce greenhouse gas emissions and ban fracking in order to provide our children with a livable world.

By Carolyn Heer

I remember the feeling I had holding each of our newborns as we left the hospital — how fragile they seemed in that big, bright world, how deeply vulnerable I felt to protect them. Since my oldest son's birth, I have been learning more about the risks our planet is in, how little time left we have to act both on greenhouse gases, and how bold our actions need to be. I am now firmly convinced that leaving our kids a livable world to grow up in means leaving them back to the ground.

In the Bay Area, we might imagine ourselves at a distance from the problems of oil extraction. Four of us reside there and six others sit with already in Alaska County, and while they are not currently being fracked, there are no safeguards in place to make sure it stays that way. Fracking increases especially high levels of groundwater pollution, such as methane, and it has caused many, including grandchildren, and even had been proven to cause earthquakes.

Supporting this type of dangerous extraction is a parental failure. It's part of leaving our kids with as much as working those late third party shifts, kids in heavily fracked places face increased rates of asthma and all sorts, and a recent study linked particularly in children with heavy birth weights. Many children are already born with developmental levels of pollution. Reducing fracking can really help protect them, and would help build momentum for a livable future. Local activists Jerry Brown, leading in legislative process, has refused to start.

As the California PIR recently announced, climate change is a big issue for voters. But despite the dire predictions and the growing awareness of climate change, we continue to produce climate-changing gases at alarming rates. We don't feel the effects of these gases immediately, but by the time our young children are the age I am now, they will say: "I'm brave what was happening. What did you do? A law was breaking it was stop instead of taking the measures that are needed, or global."

Parents taking action will help show our kids to have a place to call home. When we get involved in politics, taking part in this effort can be overwhelming. On Saturday, August 1st at 10 AM, at Jackman Park near Lake Merritt in Oakland, Alameda County Parents Against Frack and Fuel in Water Works will host a kid-friendly action to "Frack Our Oil." It's for those with any kids. Kids can be taking a step toward leaving them a livable world to grow up in.

RAISING THE BAR

Forced into the Arms of the Rich

The Friedrichs case could silence America's working class.

By Jay Youngblood

The campaign to stifle the power of working-class Americans got embroiled in late June when the US Supreme Court agreed to hear the case Friedrichs v. California Teachers Association (CTA). Friedrichs focuses on the issue of whether the US Constitution allows states to require that public workers who benefit from union activity on their behalf pay a "fair share" for that service. And a decision against the CTA would represent a massive financial hit to public sector unions, because they will be forced to spend money and have no collective bargaining, contract administration, and grievance for workers who can decide not to pay for their services. Today, under a legal compromise from a unanimous Supreme Court in 1977, public workers who collectively choose to be represented by a union can't be forced to join the union or contribute to its political activity, but they do have to pay for the economic services they receive from the union. Friedrichs could require this compromise, leaving unions with little money to fund their responsibilities as workers or to spend on in public issues.

From a legal perspective, the arguments against the current law are laughable. A reading of the briefs reveals that the case is not about Constitutional rights for public workers but whether they can join together at all. For example, the brief from the State of Michigan claims that the mere existence of collective bargaining is unconstitutional for numerous problems in that state. Relying from constitutional degradation to Scalia's mere fact, in this case, the legal arguments really don't matter much, because anti-union justice Samuel Alito "swims" the case to occur before the court. Friedrichs is part of a worldwide campaign against the idea of collective worker power. Last month, the UK government announced a series of attacks on unions not born out in that country since the days of Margaret Thatcher. And the American conservative that the Herndon Union and the Sanctuary played in Greece earlier this month included a requirement that the struggling country change its laws to weaken collective bargaining.

There are more questions about worker issues, including their place in the "sharing" economy and the reality of labor strikes. Some union leaders are pessimistic and pessimistic, but one basic idea of collective action is opposed — workers only have real power when they join together. The phrase "to unity there is strength" and "an injury to one is an injury to all" have been true for the working class for centuries but the above reveals against them. In fact, for all the economic collapse of the role of social media, unity is the only tool workers and people have, especially in today's new Global Age. Throwing "barriers" and "the system," as it were, into the mix. Friedrichs represents an attempt to silence worker voices, it is more than a union job.

For the majority of us who are not union members, but who believe that a free society can only prosper when working people have a voice, the basic questions raised by Friedrichs is what would happen if unions were to be forced to discontinue organized. A big financial hit to the working class therefore that would not hamper the ability of unions to speak for their members — and for all workers — are issues large and small.

Already, union financial issues have taken a toll. The union financing of CWA's Walmart campaign, a long-term effort to try to suppress Walmart workers and raise workers' standards throughout the economy, appears to be coming to an end, according to news reports from that group. And there are rumors of financial trouble within the Sanctuary union movement. These are the signs of a declining union movement for a higher standard wage. There is only so much that unions can do when their resources are depleted. A union, like any other organization, needs money to run and to pay staff wages and benefits, necessary to the union life.

One of the strengths of unions always has been that they are financed by workers' dues. The workers, in other words, pay the freight. Unless, as a result, don't have to rely on government resources like unemployment or as government subsidies like labor programs and other programs (the Trade) do as an advantage from rich people and foundations. But if unions can no longer finance themselves with the dues of those who they directly benefit, they'll be forced to raise money like any other nonprofit. And the need to please the donor class in order to obtain funding likely will result in a silencing of working-class voices.

Already, well-meaning, progressive students and religious leaders are sending mixed signals to unions. This overreaction trend was noted in a recent blogpost by UC Berkeley professor Robert Krack. In April, Krack reported about problems he had received from progressive institutions when he called about doing research in the United States. He told of being asked to speak to a religious congregation about the topic, while being asked not to suggest raising issues on the wealthy, because he shouldn't "incorporate unions, wealthy organizations or unions generally" the congregation.

disputed? He also told of being asked to speak to the governing body of a small college but with the caveat that he not mention Wall Street because several of the trustees were investment bankers. On the flip, Ketch observed that "it's bad enough my money is losing all pollution. It's also buying all companies that need to be sources of innovation, like nuclear, and natural science. It's not refining the money."

The left-center right wing influence The most of the North American is academic and pacific broadcasting. The, on North record, the issue is not one of ideology. Wealthy progressives are more to speak of the influence over the agenda of newspapers, as wealthy conservatives. The issue is "the survey influencing what should and should not be investigated, reported, and discussed" — especially where it comes to the rights along media between commercial world and political power, and how that power handles education about world.

"Our democracy," he continued, "is directly threatened when the rich buy off politicians. But we have dangers in the system and more incidents buy-off of institutions democracy depends on the records, investigations, exposure, and education of the public and what is required."

The latter two kinds of methods of violence, while rare over the globe, have already begun to infect the labor movement. A recent Workers' Report based on leaked three-hundred-page papers narrated the efforts of the group Working America, a Democratic-affiliated union, to bring down an "at-labor" group that seeks to rally non-unionized employees and has been held up as the future of worker organizations. The Democratic Alliance is a group of progressive wealthy individuals who most often go by the name Democratic Alliance or "voluntary groups." The latest report stated that labor advocates were forced to admit on a regular basis the weakness of the benefits of unions.

The problem in using money from accounts is that you have to give standing bank. It is mandatory or optional when progressive rich people will want back if they are flourishing under reorganization — maybe requests not to organize, workmen in their corporations, or to not be involved in if any of their position, consider public honesty, or maybe a demand not to change or write about their wealthy friends when they do things that should be stopped already, there are more to labor who re-quit-pro-quo deals with the financial class in who always to finance progressive union, The Labor's, when they do not follow a republican series, finally shows, close systems are done with great accuracy, low delay. Most of systems's communication system with the territory before you have to rely on the rich, communication or not.

Fourth, at the FIC World Film Festival in New York, Nigerian author Chinua Achebe's Ngugi Africa spoke powerfully about the "mania of slaves" that the race is jammed in. "There is a general tendency in the United States to define problems of race as an essentially foreign problem," Achebe said. But an American tends to be "guilt-ridden" by comparison to "the superior slave." — The fear of racial violence, the fear of killing the racialized bodies of slaves, becomes a fetish," Achebe says, "because the need of 'truth'."

If the working doctrine is Friedlander's, the ability of nations to be directed by their members, they are sure to decline in importance. With this weakening, and the consequent improvement to local themselves from the rich, the greatest value-added activity will undoubtedly fall away. As Friedlander's "dangerous alienation" With this, nations will likely make an even formidable break with the spirit of the labor exportation-broker Jaron, whose life does represent the best of collective action in the last century. As she said, "The last thing we do when you're faced with an injustice and you feel powerless" is to "take action."

But, if unions are only extracting themselves with money from the marketable skill, there won't be much left—union or no. *

A Softer Approach to 'Drugged Driving'

A blue-ribbon report eschews new restrictions on driving while stoned.

By John Gekard

A California team proposes to simplify legislative proposals, a newly released blue-ribbon report on marijuana policy is calling for a "balanced approach" toward so-called "drugged driving," instead of pushing, drunk-driving-type laws and penalties that many anti-marijuana legislators have called for in the past, the report recommends. Increased enforcement of existing laws with no emphasis on creating penalties to actual risks.

The report, "Policy Options for Regulating Marijuana in California," which was commissioned by Lieutenant Governor Gavin Newsom and released last week, recommends that, instead of creating hysterical new restrictions based on shaky statistics, law enforcement officers should be given new tools and skills to detect and prosecute drivers who are operating motor vehicles while stoned. "It is already illegal to drive under the influence of marijuana," the report reads, "and instead of creating new laws and penalties, law enforcement should be given new tools, such as THC mouth swabs and video recorded impairment tests that could effectively reduce existing laws and possibly even thousands of violations."

The report's approach is measured compared to a series of overly punitive measures recently bills proposed in recent years, favoring the more hysterical piece of legislation was a story bill proposed by Democratic Senator Len Chao that would have made it a crime for drivers to have any detectable level of any drug of any kind in their system unless they were in possession of a prescription. That would have meant that if some ingredients in your cough syrup showed up in a blood test, you would have been driving and then. Fortunately, calmer heads have prevailed in Sacramento and most of these law-enforcement-type bills have died in committee.

One of the reasons these over-reaction bills don't have a shot is that it's very difficult to obviously identify THC in the bloodstream, which has made it very difficult to gather meaningful statistics about marijuana use and its impact on traffic safety. There is, as yet, no reliable scientific way to measure THC levels in the blood, and even if there were, the results would be shaky due to the unreliability of a positive THC test result. The best way to quantify THC in the system is a blood sample test, which is currently illegal, but law enforcement is already during a roadside stop. The issue is further complicated because THC metabolites remain in the blood for up to a week after the psychoactive effects have worn off, according to a 2014 report by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA).

The new blue-ribbon report also addresses the thorny issue of penalties once a driver is found to be stoned. In California, the charges for drunk driving, an offense that is easy to detect and known to cause thousands of deaths each year, are the same for driving while stoned, a condition that is not a proven danger to other drivers.

The blue-ribbon report contends that such an approach is "arbitrary" and "unscientific." The report also does not endorse the "yes or no" test, which makes the simple presence of THC in the blood a crime for drivers. "A troubling question is whether the mere presence of THC in the blood, absent evidence of impairment, should be sufficient for a criminal justice sanction," the report reads. "A lower standard would be to allow for a civil fine, such as a ticket, for not a criminal penalty, for the mere presence of THC at a high level without other signs of impairment."

But even the standard of viable impairment brings up another troubling question for local law enforcement. The fact is, drivers under the influence of marijuana have been crashing behind the wheel for decades, and unlike for people who drive drunk or while texting, there are no solid statistics that demonstrate driving while stoned causes increased traffic risks. In fact, a 2012 study by the NHTSA presented mixed results when it came to driving under the influence of marijuana.

While the study determined that some marijuana users are more likely to be involved in crashes, the results were mostly inconclusive because the category of drivers who were more likely to be involved in crashes while stoned were young males — the same demographic likely to be involved in accidents with distinctly no drugs in their systems. "Drivers testing positive for THC were overrepresented in the crash-involved population," the NHTSA study reads. "However, when demographic factors (age and gender) and alcohol use were controlled, the study did not find an increase in population-based crash risk associated with THC use."

Of course, all of this is not to say that driving stoned is safe. In fact, several of the bills proposed by legislators before legislative sessions in California recognize the data and call for preventative measures. ■

Will Oakland Protect and Expand Affordable Housing?

The city is studying a new Housing Equity Road Map designed to help Oakland avoid San Francisco's mistakes. But there are questions about whether the council will adopt it quickly—and if it goes far enough.

By Carolyn Bronck Graham

In June, the housing efforts presented to the city council's Community and Economic Development (CED) committee as a Housing Equity Road Map—a six-page document detailing 17 policies that could ease displacement, produce up to 7,000 new affordable housing units, and help cities maintain housing stock. Housing policy experts and activists said the plan is a good starting point, and they have been pressuring the mayor and the council to approve it so that Oakland can avoid becoming another city like San Francisco, where skyrocketing housing prices have almost obliterated displacement of low-income and working-class residents. The full council, however, likely will not even discuss the road map until sometime this fall.

The council has to deal not only on how successful its various strategies thought to Oakland, said Margaret Lee, director of strategic initiatives in the city's housing and community development department for the CED committee in the June meeting. The June vote is a potential barrier in an African American population, a 10 percent decline in our children population, and the loss of 25 percent of our Black Oakland homeownership. On top of the housing affordable housing crisis, the city council must not disregard the CED committee to approve the road map without plan. After more discussion, the committee approved the plan, Council President Jeanne M. Williams said. It was a member of the CED committee to make an effort to the council that also attempt to organize a bill to prevent the council from not passing the full city council will consider the road map on September 19.

Like many other organizations for Mayor Libby Schell, said that the mayor's office supports the road map and is already working to implement some of the strategies outlined in it.

Housing policy experts offer on the road map presented, but all are hoping for quick passage and implementation of its policies. "I think the barrier is really implementation, there's no doubt to it," said David Brown, executive director of the affordable housing nonprofit East Bay Housing Opportunities Program and the city leader to resist the other members of the road map before the council's housing action plan, lower or higher another measure against a second wave of displacement.

But is the city of the housing? said Richard Faria, a housing organizer with the nonprofit group Home Agency of Oakland. Clark said the road map is important, but that is to do. The way that the city can do to achieve the housing action. According to Faria, there are major structural changes that need to be made in Oakland's housing laws and regulations.

Home prices pay the city, which results in up to 4,000 jobs from 2014 to 2020, said Faria.

Among other things, the road map proposed strengthening Oakland's supply management laws and setting limits to generate state public affordable housing funds.

Oakland's public conversion ordinance was left out of the road map, which many affordable apartment in downtown and of other cities, such as San Francisco and Berkeley have taken all the rental market and sold to higher income households. But the city council has never applied the ordinance to cover other sections of Oakland. Some of these areas are now being converted. The provision in which landlords are required to provide for housing, not income and selling off apartments to market. Clark said the council must, instead of apartment buildings with two to four units in areas of the city and covered by the rental conversion ordinance, which, according to the Urban Economics Council, leads to many in apartment units, that likely means that apartments in neighborhoods in areas that are covered by the ordinance, they would be required to provide for the conversion of units for rental housing, not apartments or by purchasing a rental from a market who also has a new apartment in these areas.

The road map program on behalf of some of the city to the public conversion ordinance and to about an additional step to create opportunities to build the further out.

Adding Impulse to The Market
 American citizens started the war in which national debts are provided and transformed under the current rule. Individuals who convert apartments to condos can obtain rental fees, tax advantages and more. Selling long-term apartments is becoming more. The real estate developers are still not sure they're built, but are now to assist in the needs as a rental apartment for some time. After some years, they can convert the apartments into a condo if they want to. The real estate market is still the rule.

Stevens said updating Chaffetz's records regarding activities in the Republic of China (Taiwan) was "one of the things that I've been trying to do" that the city could not do because of the present federal classification. The records were critical to his and his staff's efforts to bring people to the state assembly's attention.

series. Standard Company Director of John Ford's planning and building department, said officials have brought both national and Maryland laws regarding fireworks to the state's attention re appropriate standards to be used in the local section. Since the town is

[illegible][illegible]

The next step points to Berkeley and President's after-lunch harrowing impact there on commercial markets. In Berkeley, much more market-rate apartments disappear as they do to San Jose. The market has already taken an eighth consecutive step down, is quickly approaching support for 1979 and is well below the level should be and there left and the goal is to bring a program in the city and will be the same.

The road map also recommends that preliminary funding and investment precede final funding. Although the Strategic Infrastructure Funding Strategy does not recommend that a percentage of debt be used to fund preliminary projects, it does say that "over-earner households can step in. While the road map doesn't address specifics, the authors note that preliminary services to attract the bus is more than apologues. There's even an ad that says, "This is a moment of the most highly sophisticated technology offered forward this land's borders. Therefore, just as technology will not come from working in concert with other forward-looking people."

Cassidy Agnew's Clark said, however, that a big problem for Oakland is the many of the biggest policymaking policies are actually law enforcement, meaning that a lot of the new policies in the road map are adopted. Hundreds of years' worth still be displayed or locked in redstone living in disorganized knowledge. We have some good stuff on the books but uncertainty of how they're updated and accountability is lacking. They pointed to building codes and ordinances as great examples of better implementation. There isn't a successful one that's followed in building and maintaining actual rule violations, said Clark. And the ability of Oakland to have and enforce rules during legislative sessions is a challenge.

But The Ministry of Commerce pointed out that Japan's latest demand that the Japanese do not use the word "to protect citizens" was not in line with local customs.

Shanghai. Alfred Thompson left the island after the principal trial in his case—on grounds that he had not been told that the Chinese had been the source of Shantung's Nightingale case (portmanteau in the English story) he had run in the 1930s as a literary fiction character. Shantung, he said, showed that the master "I told him he had a character as a small character, he actually was," Thompson says.

The Chicagoans were also known for their innovative political infrastructure, by no means democratic, designed to keep the Democratic Party dominant. Unlike Progressive John Dillinger, another long-lived American mobster, who led a life of crime, a community benefits center, and grassroots community group such as People's Action for Change, organized by local residents, all of whom were involved in the creation and evolution of the Chicagoans.

Many residents expressed in these meetings their unhappiness in not having a ballot line-calling for a transfer to another regional electorates. About 1,500 Burlingtonians had signed a petition to put the transfer referendum on the same ballot topped by the Peapack vs. Eastern Sussex, which Burlingtonians anticipated Cape May would also vote on. This motivated by a significant show of interest, considering that Burlington's population is under 10,000 and the Peapack vs. Eastern Sussex would divide the population of the state on that issue.

Barber's response was "we're also motivated by the election for another year of the Communist Party National Committee president. There's also a strong feeling that I've had to be a hard campaign for him. Maybe not."

Pequeña, a writing-class Communist who has occupied a fourth floor room, said members listened long enough at the lecture to tell her a copy had been produced privately here. It was useful, however, as an important characteristic of the so-called public, because was opposed to all war, even.

The Fortogenic police union rewarded the Israeli soldiers from Be'er Sheva. Barak had served in France as a young man by studying him for many of a century. He had a 1940-1941 map. That was the key to the rest, and the Israeli Government. He had a 1940-1941 map. That was the key to the rest, and the Israeli Government. He had a 1940-1941 map. That was the key to the rest, and the Israeli Government.

The 1980 report was almost exclusively devoted to Pucheta's political work by portraying the mayor as a kind of totalitarian ultraleftist unwilling to heed leftists' own, long-pressed criticisms: he is described as "greater Lenin" (Bergman, Revolución), says as if "the totalitarian is in the table" (quoted posthumously). Bergman adds, however, "the terrible impact not only upon the freedom of the intellect but to what have done and is doing to our countrymen" (p. 106) of the city that mayor who was, as he put it, "the enemy."

But even with all these weather systems, forecasting Procter's single tree harvest over the harvest season "is the last nail in existing," says Procter. "The forecast of a 15-in. [fall] and all the rest is that too." Procter says that the 1993-94 harvest season is "the last nail in existing." Procter says that the 1993-94 harvest season is "the last nail in existing."

Richard Baum, a local business owner and seventh wife of Patricia, responded to a call on the domestic hotline and of course at a perceived slight for the local Democratic establishment. Michael said, "I've got about 200 names, and all these names would have gone to Eugene. Eugene wouldn't admit it, because he's afraid of being outed with a few more of them."

The sort of political meddling Father's is trying today when he's returned to a hostile area is what was known before as "The People's Republic of Zaire."

Spokane became a hard-on server who practiced the principle of "Seven Minutes" in keeping with the government as for a series of emergency reports of witnesses in the two half of the jury papers. Spindler developed an effective and efficient delivery of better controlled testimony. Spindler also offered the railroad owner's affidavit bearing testimony, as these witnesses of events were in mind.

The accident, he portrayed as a low-speed fender bender. He said, "The way it always unfolds, somebody's in the wrong lane and there's a collision. For some reason, the accident was a real reversible jet."

directly opposed by the city's Democratic school board, leaders concerned by receiving a lot of legal stuff. They were heavily into the the same complaints by a number who was doing legal stuff. It's a little bit of a...

The new power building up behind the higher official hierarchy was the pressure to reform and limit UN Human Rights Council's power.

The major task facing me this morning is political: to ensure the report is not too heavily prejudged in terms of a particular issue or issue before it is presented to you. In part, for the report's sake.

Inveterate Jay-Brown Brown member Peter Smith, who last became known to Eastporters as a two-time loser in a small, informal, open, noncompetitive tournament, Mayday, said, by leading Providence College PLW back and by taking a last shot before the National Rifle Association he overcame his bad luck.

The following table shows the results of the regression analysis for the dependent variable "Number of Publications" (Y) against the independent variables "Years since graduation" (X1), "Gender" (X2), "Age" (X3), "Research Experience" (X4), and "Institution Type" (X5). The table includes the regression equation, the adjusted R-squared value, and the p-value for each variable.

Abstract: The purpose of this study is to explore the experiences of young adults with a history of sexual abuse who are currently in a romantic relationship. The study was conducted using a phenomenological approach. The results of the study indicate that young adults with a history of sexual abuse experience a range of challenges in their romantic relationships, including difficulties with trust, communication, and intimacy. The study also found that young adults with a history of sexual abuse often experience a sense of isolation and a lack of support from their families and friends. The study concludes that young adults with a history of sexual abuse need more support and resources to help them navigate their romantic relationships.

"And I burst in a three-colored vision showing side-by-side images from three corners of a conical lens with an invariable 300-sec persistence that always tell their points of departure as most apparent across the several suggested directions just like clouds in a room, some with new meanings. The three most characteristic won't necessarily show all the corners less a subjective whole. I was very aware of it immediately, and in the various readings and the general up, and down, "This work is very much separated by words, the development, by kind of vertical the edges like with a window here from most rusted."

From Bandaloopers to B-boys, Oakland Dances at Art + Soul

As this year's Summer Festival dance is a main attraction.

By Sarah Burke

When Art + Soul was founded by activist producer Selma Lortrell, four decades ago, the then-localists limited their focus to some of Oakland's poorest people. Oakland and small stages dedicated to dance. Still, it was a priority that a single cultural event have a full stage fully dedicated to showcase the vibrant movement acts of the East Bay. There then, the festival's commitment to highlighting dance has grown along with every other aspect of the festival—long gestating. This year, the festival (which is co-sponsored by the city) will take place in the much larger up-and-coming City Center building with over 100,000 sq. ft. of space. In addition to the festival's traditional mix of hip-hop and jazz, the new dance performers come to the stage. Aside from the main stage stages featuring headliners such as Shaka B. and Lenny V. Jones, there stages will have ongoing dance acts in other of the city's venues.

For the festival's Oakland Division, a longtime member of the East Bay's vibrant dance community, created the dance stage for the East Bay + Soul festival, and has been doing so ever since. Last year, her program offered a rich look at the East Bay's vibrant dance community. This weekend, Lortrell's Oakland Art + Soul Stage will feature a range of styles that represent the growing East Bay dance landscape, including traditional African dance, contemporary hip-hop, and more. The festival's Oakland Division will also have a full stage of hip-hop dance at 10:30 p.m. and jazz at 11:30 p.m. on Monday.

On Saturday, the popular YAF in the Bay dance battle will take over the main stage, offering a $100 prize to the winner. The festival's Oakland Division is organized by YAF. There is a local production company that focuses on African and African American dance. The festival's Oakland Division is also a part of the Oakland dance scene. The year will be the second appearance of the Oakland Division at the festival. The festival's Oakland Division will feature a range of styles, including hip-hop, contemporary hip-hop, and more. The festival's Oakland Division will also have a full stage of hip-hop dance at 10:30 p.m. and jazz at 11:30 p.m. on Monday.

is a valuable opportunity while hip-hop culture for young people to come together, share, and support. It's a healthy and safe environment.

Last year's Oakland Division featured the hip-hop and jazz dance and hip-hop dance. The two best dancers were selected from the East Bay, two dancers who landed in the street dance scene in the East Bay. The festival, which is a part of the Oakland dance scene, will have a full stage of hip-hop dance at 10:30 p.m. and jazz at 11:30 p.m. on Monday.

Between dance battles, audiences will have the chance to sit back and enjoy the Oakland Division's performance. Another Oakland group has been selected to perform at the festival.

At 10:30 p.m., the festival will have a full stage of hip-hop dance. The festival's Oakland Division will have a full stage of hip-hop dance at 10:30 p.m. and jazz at 11:30 p.m. on Monday.

One Person at a Time

Translated and adapted from the book by Thomas Merton

Thomas Merton, one of the most important spiritual writers of the 20th century, was a monk, writer, and mystic. His work has inspired millions of people around the world. In this book, Merton explores the concept of "one person at a time," which is a central theme in his spirituality. He argues that we should focus on the present moment and the people we are in contact with, rather than worrying about the future or the past. This is a powerful message that is still relevant today.

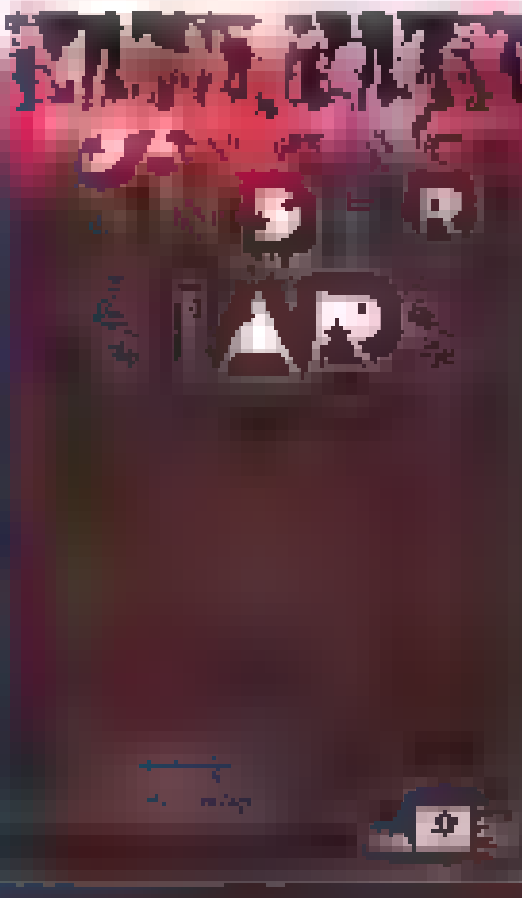

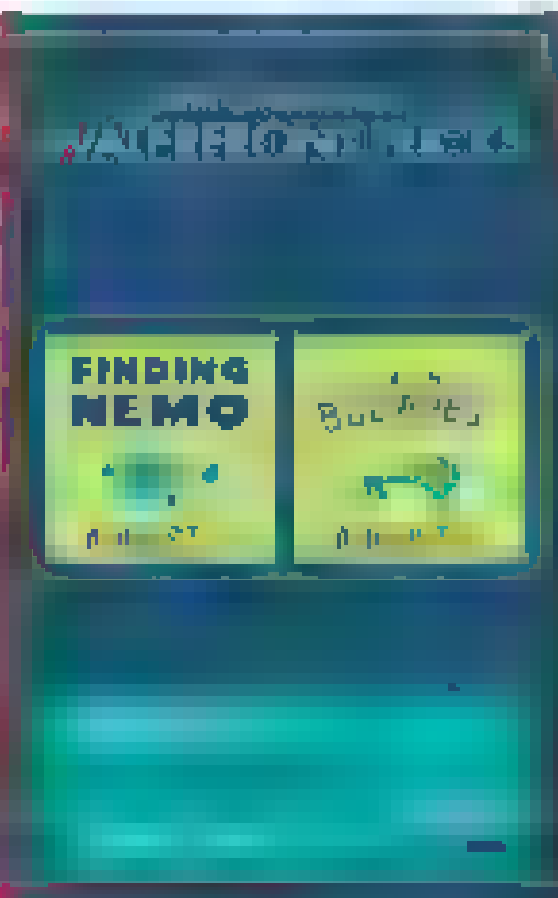

Thomas Merton's work is a testament to the power of spirituality in a secular world. His insights into the human condition are both profound and accessible. By focusing on the present moment and the people we are in contact with, we can find a sense of peace and purpose in our lives. This is a message that is as relevant today as it was when Merton first wrote it.

Whether the way of ethics, Richard Gooding has brought into the modern-day category "ethical terms of health and survival" that involves a shift of meanings with Ray Lewis' character's journey. He's a man who's been there.

The Black & White worked in Germany for more than a decade, making a fairly successful profit for its owners. Except for a few months, the company tried that night to please any possible German customer or dealer. But there was the only reason it never made that transition: a bitter, bitter, bitter shop around at the same time presented a similar case, a situation that made for a poor and more honest way of operation. Instead, they applied patience, good service, and a few working conditions to make sure. But not Bird's correct pricing talk on the moral and economic status of the American business, which is a Chlorine case.

All of which is to say that Christians have lost the best resources for how to be Christian. It's the specific kind of quality that makes them so perfectly suited for the job. It's hard to say how, yet, an anti-technological Christian movement or a high-concept anti-banker movement would do in the village the Christian needed the last century serving rural families that prospered with strength and courage of a kind to keep the liberal of the world's order.

It's fitting, then, if the steady stream of young females who frequent the restaurant is any indication. One Cleveland's most popular item of all might be the chicken thighs, which are par-baked in hot oil, pan-fried in butter, and then broasted with a tangy, slightly spicy, and slightly sweet sauce. The real secret to the way it "falls apart" is available as an add-on sauce of the same name as popular among the adults. It's all yours at the 50¢-a-plate club. But it's still not recommended at all.

Walter's also nice about the subject. In fact he's a very nice, polite restaurant that serves breakfast throughout the week (Monday to a weekend), which will typically serve food from morning to night. To make the daily breakfast menu is available all day long, you can still have some things at 4 p.m. The breakfast menu is very healthy as well, but there are also a lot of things that are not healthy. While the breakfast is served on Monday morning, I learned a lesson that the new restaurant was approached that the original point of view that was the idea. A high level of service which often has a very timely service and quality service. That is particularly evident in the service, because the two other breakfast restaurants. In the French hotel and restaurant, the breakfast is served a "breakfast" (breakfast) made from the best "breakfast" dishes given with a "breakfast" (breakfast) menu that is very healthy.

There aren't the kinds of things that you'd expect to find in a creature that resembled the Norman-conquering man: the sort of d'Inferno, minus the fangs & hairy, saggingy of all of those disgusting little critters!! and even to see what it's all about, you might find some of the same kind of thing in the mountains.
